Consultation Questions on Notice Period for Book Closure

We can support the notice period for book closure to five business days (or four clear business days excluding the announcement date) as suggested in the consultation paper as the minimum notice period requirement. However, it is more practicable to adopt a notice period for book closure for six business days in which case it would be unlikely to change the book closure period in the event of typhoon or black rainstorm falling in any one of the two uninterrupted trading days. If the listed issuer decides to take the minimum five business days notice period for rights issue or open offer, the listed issuer must consult the share registrar and the relevant parties for timeline and workflow planning.

With reference to the rights issues we handled lately, the book closure period usually lasted for 3-5 business days and the PALs were dispatched on the business day following the last day of book-closure period. When the timeline is shortened, share registrars and the listed issuer's printer would have a very tight processing window for printing and dispatch of PALs and prospectus to registered shareholders.

From the share registrars' perspective, the operational procedures would be changed entirely under the revised timeline taking into account the possible change of book closure period resulting from typhoon or black rainstorm. We would only be able to print and personalize PALs on the first day of the book-closure period instead of these being printed before the book closure as currently the case. The operational feasibility would be largely dependent on the number of registered shareholders the listed issuers have on the Register of Members.

2. In the case of a rights issue or an open offer, do you agree to our proposal to require extension of the notice period by postponing the book closure date, if necessary, to provide the market with a minimum of two uninterrupted trading days for trading in cum-rights securities during the notice period if, for examples, trading on the Exchange is interrupted due to typhoon and/or a black rainstorm warning or trading of the issuer's securities is suspended?

Yes

For open offer, additional trading days may be required, in particular, when there are a number of parties e.g. sub-custodian, global custodian, fund managers, beneficial owners, etc. involved in the process chain. An open offer differs from a rights issue in that investors are unable to sell the shares that they purchase under the open offer to other parties. Some investors see a secondary market offering as bad news because it causes share dilution.
