Trading Hours Extension Hong Kong

Consultation Questions:

- 1) What do you think about the two proposed changes and why?
- 2) What will be the impacts on your operations?
- 3) How much lead time will you require for the implementation of the two proposed changes?
- 4) Are there other comments or areas regarding the proposed extension of trading hours that you want to raise or discuss?

- 1) Although in the short term this may bring a positive boost to liquidity, there is no evidence that the longer hours would result in sustainable increase in trading velocity and therefore overall liquidity. While aligning the hours with China is a sensible goal for the long term, this is likely irrelevant until the stocks are fungible between all the markets, therefore posing no practical current benefits.
- 2) No significant changes expected.
- 3) Most likely would need around a month to properly implement the changes and test.
- 4)
 - a. Rather than extend the hours, there are some other viable options that could be effective tools in increasing liquidity. The speed of the exchange, due to the throttling on the number of orders that can be sent per second, is slower than most developed exchanges. Therefore, getting rid of throttling on the exchange gateways would help both larger and small house firms.
 - b. Besides the speed of the exchange, the order types are still based on what was comprised almost a decade ago. There is currently no dark functionality – perhaps introducing some partially displayed/un-displayed orders or iceberg order types would help to increase activity in the market.
 - c. Furthermore, understandably that there are regulatory issues, HKEx is currently the only developed market with no closing auction, where we believe surely there can be some sort of agreement made.
