	☐ Yes
	⊠ No
	If your answer is "No", please give reasons for your views.
	We see no reason of principle why an exceptional factor (so long as it is temporary, as the existing wording requires) should not be treated in the same way as a market downturn. This applies in particular, in our view, to a non-cash impairment charge which will not affect the issuer's future profits such that they would not meet the minimum profit requirement.
